Questions to Gabriele

-What do you think the aim of the Eudemos project is?

-Gabriele: I believe the Eudemos project aims to promote civic education and European values, with a particular focus on the concepts of citizenship, democracy and human rights.

The project aims to combat misinformation about the EU, this increasing awareness and participation of European citizens.

-Which of the many experiences did you like most about the project?

-Gabriele: one of the many experiences that I particularly liked was the trip by speedboat.

Together with an expert and bilingual guide we went to discover the Mining Coast inside the park Geolocation: from Porto Flavia to Pan di Zucchero, from the Grotta Sardegna to Cala Domestica.

Questions to Tiziano

-What do you think of the culture of other nations?

-Tiziano: talking to other guys gave us the opportunity to get to know their cultures, also to compare ours with theirs. Some of theirs are similar to ours but others have really surprised us for their particularity.

-What do you think about Carbonia?

-Tiziano: the history of Carbonia reflects the cycle of growth and decline of an industrial city. Founded to exploit coal mines, it experienced a period of prosperity, but the closure of mines in the 1960s led to an economic crisis. Today, Carbonia is trying to reinvent itself by focussing on new opportunities, such as tourism and renewable energy, while maintaining a link with its roots.

Questions to Leonardo

-Was this project constructive?

-Leonardo: yes, it was really constructive to realise this project! It allowed you to collaborate, learn new things and put language skills into practice. It was an enriching experience in many ways.

-How socially useful was the project from a linguistic point of view?

-Leonardo: the project was extremely useful from a linguistic point of view, as it allowed to improve communication skills and enrich vocabulary. In addition, it fostered dialogue and the exchange of ideas between the participants, making it an important opportunity for social and cultural growth.

Questions to Siam

-What was the most unique or different thing compared to other trips you have taken?

-Siam: The most unique thing about this trip was working with people from different countries like Poland, Greece, Portugal, Spain, and Italy on a collaborative project. It was a great opportunity to learn from diverse cultures and gain new perspectives, which made this experience stand out from my other travels.

-Was there a place or a beach that surprised you the most?

-Siam: The beaches of Porto Pino and Porto Flavia in Sardinia really surprised me. Porto Pino impressed with its crystal-clear waters and white sand dunes, while Porto Flavia stood out for its stunning views and historical significance, making both places unique and memorable.

Thanks for your attention!
